Vineyard Haven, Mass., Sept. 12—
Heavy east northeast winds still continued this morning. There has been no steamer from Nantucket for three days, and all telegraphic communication between Martha's Vineyard and the main land stopped early yesterday morning. The schooner and the coast is a tossing ocean bearing wreckage upon every wave. Through the waste of spray storm—tattered sails and naked masts of a score of deserted and dismantled vessels are dimly seen. Monday night the storm raged without abatement.

The crew of the tug A. L. Luckenbach, which had laid alongside the schooner H. E. Morse all night, succeeded this morning in taking the crew of the latter vessel, nine in number, on board, and afterwards brought them to this place. The scooner was blown on to Hawk Nest shoal, about 5 p. m. Monday. The crew took to the rigging, where they remained clunging to the ropes for nearly forty hours. The men were nearly exhausted when rescued and could not have lasted much longer. It was impossible for the tug to approach the stranded schooner nearer than twenty yards, and the men in the rigging were directed to jump overboard. It is estimated that $150,000 will cover the loss to Atlantic City and her interests. Great joy was manifested this morning when a messenger was dispatched through the city to announce the first train since Monday afternoon would start at 10 o'clock. A great rush was made for the Camden & Atlantic railroad station, and in less than half an hour it was crowded. Five sections were sent out. The first section had eight passenger coaches and a baggage car. Every ear was crowded even to standing space. The trip across the meadows was one not soon to be forgotten. Hundreds of pleasure boats of all sizes and descriptions were packed close to the roadbed. The masts of many of these had to be cut away to permit the trains to cross the long beach. The new inject cut through the Sandy Hook peninsular above Seabright is being rapidly widened and deepened by the west side of Seabright are still under six feet of water.
